

Kataleifos Interview Question 9

Kataleifos:

What you always take with you after a performance ends, if you feel good about it, is very pleasant. Your fatigue disappears, the tension releases, and everything else. The thing is, when you do not feel good about a performance, then you leave the theater a little tired and feeling bad. In that play (Virginia Woolf), I had loved the role very much, which was one of the hardest roles I have ever rehearsed. Since finally, I was somewhat successful in the role, I used to leave very satisfied after the performance, in spite of the play's tension, which lasted for three hours and had continuous fights and confrontations with Martha, the heroine of the play. George in Virginia Woolf was one of the hardest roles I have ever assumed.
